

When working with a dog the size of the treat used is determined by the dog, our relationship with the dog, the situation, etc. For example, if using a meatball to work with a dog:

Entire Meatball

Used to build trust with a medium to large dog

Or to get your dog's attention if they've completely lost focus

Half of a Meatball

Used to build trust with a small dog or to continue building trust with medium to large dogs.

Used to get your dog's attention if they've lost focus

Quarter of a Meatball

Used to build trust with a small dog or to continue building trust with all dogs.

Used to get your dog's attention if they've lost focus

Start large, repeat, then move to smaller and smaller pieces

Meatball cut into a pie

Used to build and improve trust with a dog and to train.

Used to get your dog's attention if they've lost focus

If the treat doesn't get your dog's attention, you've gone too small – add another piece!

Meatball cut into a pie AND cut in half

16 treats out of meatball is the perfect training size!

Because they smell so good and are so tasty for dogs, mix this size in with other treats to eventually transition your dog off meatballs
